Minneapolis City Council votes to go wireless

The council voted 12-1 in favor of a contract for a new wireless Internet system to blanket Minneapolis.

By Charley Bruce

Following in the footsteps of Philadelphia and San Francisco, the Minneapolis City Council passed a measure Sept. 1 to make a citywide wireless Internet network a reality.

The council approved a deal for a 10-year contract with Minnetonka-based US Internet. The system will provide service for residents at a $20-per-month fee cap for individuals and a $30-per-month fee cap for businesses.

☒ US Internet will pay $20 million for the infrastructure. The city agreed to pay at least $1.25 million a year for the next 10 years.

☐ The measure passed by a 12-1 vote. Cam Gordon, Ward 2 council member, was the lone dissenter.

Cam Gordon

"I liked a lot of (the ordinance) and didn't have a problem with most things," Gordon said after the council meeting. "I just wanted a little more time to go over the specifics."

He said he wanted safeguards to ensure US Internet would provide service for the full 10 years. His concern was that a large competitor, such as Comcast or Qwest, would purchase the small company.

Gordon also said he wanted to let the public view the terms of the contract.

The council chose US Internet after EarthLink and US Internet carried out pilot programs in specific parts of Minneapolis, Gordon said. Nine other companies showed interest in the program.

The agreement has measures attempting to lower the digital divide.

Part of the deal was a community benefits agreement, Gordon said. The company will provide resources to create opportunities for those unable to access the Internet.

A revenue-sharing mechanism of 5 percent created the digital inclusion fund, which will provide services and connection in parks and libraries, Gordon said.

It's going to be considerably cheaper than private service providers, said Nihar linal, a professor at the University's Digital Technology Center.

"I think they're looking at $20 a month compared to high-speed cable or DSL, which are more like $40 to $50 a month," linal said.

in generally the same fashion as San Francisco and Philadelphia, Jindal said.

The system is like a coffee shop "hot spot," Jindal said: Users within range of the signal will get Internet on their computers, with enough hot spots throughout the city to provide continuous Internet access.

"It's really like a cellular network, but with Wi-Fi," he said.

The system will have benefits for city services as well.

"It can serve the dual purpose of being available to just residents, but if there is an emergency it can provide a network for emergency purposes," Jindal said.

Diane Hofstede, Ward 3 council member, said the system has the potential to give emergency responders more information.

"I feel good about this," she said. "It's a step forward in the right direction."

The system will be able to connect different emergency services, Hofstede said, to allow police units to communicate with each other or with the fire department.

Eventually, the Fire department would be able to download the floor plans of a burning building, she said.

University students and faculty members could benefit too, and could soon be able to access the Internet even while out of range of the University's wireless network, Gordon said.

Jindal said US Internet most likely will use the standard Wi-Fi band. He said he doesn't believe it will have a big impact on the University's wireless system, since US Internet likely will not put as many receptors in the area.

"There is big hope the University will take advantage of this and join in to the entire system," Gordon said. "There was big interest from the city making sure this could meet the university's need for Internet access as well."

US Internet did not return calls for this story.

Minneapolis WiFi system could close digital divide

by Brandt Williams, Minnesota Public Radio
September 5, 2006

Construction is expected to start later this month on a broadband wireless network that will blanket the city of Minneapolis. Once it's operational, subscribers will be able to access the Internet at speeds comparable to other broadband service providers. And they will be able to do so for a relatively low monthly fee. But some say the biggest advantages of the network will be cost savings for the city and anarrowing of the technology gap between lower- and upper-income residents.

Minneapolis, Minn. — Last week, the Minneapolis City Council awarded Minnetonka-based U.S Internet the city's wireless broadband network contract. Soon, workers will begin installing around 1,800 radio transmitters on light poles, buildings and other structures. The radios will transmit data between the network and wireless capable computers, phones or personal digital assistants.

James Farstad, program manager for the Minneapolis wireless initiative, says with connection speeds of one- to three-megabits-per-second, U S Internet's service makes a viable alternative to high-speed cable or DSL service for some computer users. "It is greater speed, it is bi-directional, it is less cost and it is mobile," Farstad notes. "And depending upon the particular customer's situation any and all of those criteria might be significant advantages that they might want to compare with the alternatives that are available to them now."

Residential subscribers will be able to access the network for $19.95 a month. Cable companies and DSL providers offer comparable speeds but at sometimes twice the money. People with wireless capable laptops can access the Internet from nearly anywhere within Minneapolis city limits.

However, Farstad says there may a few spots where reception may not be optimal

"The example we have utilized is for instance, the Butler Wildflower Garden," he says. "We don't expect full coverage in a particular area where there is not the required infrastructure to support any type of system like this."

Farstad says Minneapolis wireless also offers a few other notable features. He says it will help the city reduce the amount it already spends on Internet access and other wireless network services. The network will also allow police officers to view real time video From security cameras while in their squad cars and will enable city inspectors to connect with city Computers while they work in the field.

Another feature is the community benefits agreement. Under the agreement U.S. Internet will participate in city efforts to shrink the digital divide between lower and upper income residents.

Catherine Settani, who is leading those efforts, says they will likely include more technical literacy programs for low-income people and immigrants who are learning to speak English. She says the city wants to also add about 200 free internet access points. U.S. Internet has agreed to contribute $500,000 up front to help and five percent of revenues per year, totalling an estimated $10 million over a seven-year period.

Settani says the money will likely go to help organizations that are already working to close the digital divide.

"There's a lot of non-profits already out there doing this. They're just doing this without any money," she says. "They're pulling funds from other programs to run their computer labs and run their basic technoigy classes. So this is going to provide an opportunity for those agencies to really beef up their programs and do a little more outreach."

Minneapolis is one of 300 U.S. cities that are in some stage of implementing a municipal wireless network, says Craig Settles, the president of Successful-dot.com, a San Francisco Bay-area company that helps businesses and organizations use the Internet and wireless technology

He says municipal wireless networks are not necessarily revenue generators. Instead, he says they work best for cities, like Minneapolis, that want to improve city services and broaden Internet access to people who can't afford it.

"For those cities that are concerned about those segments of its cities and rural areas in these underserved areas, then this third area of digital inclusion is also a major benefit and justification for doing the network," Settles says.

Construction on the Minneapolis wireless network is expected to begin in three to four weeks and could be operational next fall.

Overview

The rapidly changing pace of network transformations is generating new opportunities for ADC. Communications service providers from the largest global carriers to start-up wireless operators are looking for ways to deliver high-quality video, data and voice services over a single IP-based converged network to end-users in the office, at home and on the go. ADC's industry-leading portfolio of network infrastructure solutions and services ensures a smooth transition as our customers transform their traditional voice networks to competitive broadband, video and IP networks.

Since ADC was founded in 1935, it has become a world leader in providing global network infrastructure products and services that enable the profitable delivery of high-speed Internet, video, data, and voice services to residential, business and mobile subscribers worldwide. With the acquisition of the KRONE Group in 2004, ADC now offers global copper- and fiber-based connectivity solutions and cabling products used in public access and enterprise networks and provides global scale and expanded products and services to better serve customers anywhere in the world.

Products and Services

ADC carefully designs and manufactures its global network infrastructure products and services to suit the needs of public networks and enterprise customers worldwide. Infrastructure solutions sit at the foundation of every network that relies on speed, bandwidth and quality of Internet/data, video and voice services. Fiber and copper connectivity products, including wireline, wireless, and data services, and cable networks serve as the critical junction and components that tie networks together and link them to each other. The company's digital products include fiber termination and outside plant equipment, small-form-factor connectors, fiber and copper test systems, remote test and monitoring products, structured cabling solutions, enable network technicians to organize, test, configure, and troubleshoot for maximum network performance. Products include OmniReach™ Fiber-to-the-Premises solutions, FiberGuide® Raceway, Ethernet Distribution Frames, RF Wave® Signal Management Platforms DSX1®, PowerWorx® Fuse Panels, and fiber distribution frames and panels.

ADC also offers service providers High Density Main Distribution Frames and Outside Plant Solutions as well as the LSA-PLUS technology, considered the de facto global standard for connectivity in public access networks. This quick connection technology is at the heart of many products. Market leading connectivity and cabling solutions for Enterprise Networking, including TrueNet® technology has led many global enterprises to specify ADC for their IT passive infrastructure needs. ADC also provides solutions for the Enterprise market segment. The company's TrueNet Structured Cabling Solution is installed in large enterprises in a variety of markets all over the world. In addition to its leading CopperTen™ (10-Gigabit Ethernet) and network convergence solutions, the TrueNet portfolio offers solutions for data center applications that address the reliability, scalability and thermal requirements of these mission-critical facilities.

In addition, the company enables wireless carriers to get more from their networks with its Digivance® digital distributed antenna systems (DAS). ADC's expanded wireless portfolio provides solutions that include enhancements to our Digivance RF transport products and ClearGain® Tower-Mounted Amplifiers that will broaden our capabilities in global markets. In addition, ADC's Wi-Fi and WiMAX product offerings are gaining traction with major operators worldwide as they look for ways to address the ever-increasing demand for wireless capacity and bandwidth. ADC also offers products to take advantage of the growth opportunities in the wireless backhaul market.

ADC's Professional Services organization serves North America, France, and Germany with a broad service portfolio. The group provides network planning, deployment and maintenance services to mobile, fixed and multi-service operators, as well as deployment services for more than 60 network equipment manufacturers.

ADC Introduces New Wireless Products at WiMAX World USA

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct 09, 2006 (BUSINESS WIRE) -- ADC (NASDAQ:ADCT) (www.adc.com), today announced that it is featuring two new Digivance(R) WMX WiMAX products at the WiMAX World USA Conference & Exhibition, October 10-12, at the World Trade Center in Boston, Booth #610. As part of its exhibit, ADC will conduct a WiMAX demonstration featuring live video streaming over the Digivance WMX WiMAX solution and managed by ADC's SG-1 Service Gateway.

The Digivance WMX 3000 Base Station and Digivance WMX 300 Subscriber Unit are additions to ADC's family of Digivance WMX WiMAX solutions that are built on proven technologies. The Digivance WMX 3000 Base Station is a stackable, carrier-class platform from which wireless operators can launch premium voice, multimedia and data services. The system offers a broad range of deployment options including operation as a single-sector base station or within a multi-sector cell site. It supports fixed and nomadic WiMAX applications and seamlessly integrates into a mobile 802.16e-2005 WiMAX network.

The Digivance WMX 300 Subscriber Unit offers a broad range of functions required by medium-to-large businesses and enterprises while supporting high-speed service to hundreds of simultaneously connected users. The product provides a low-cost, multi-megabit data service alternative to expensive leased line service and enables scalable differentiated services for business and enterprise customers.

"With its superior price/performance characteristics, WiMAX is gaining momentum as an alternative technology for wireless broadband access," said Todd Schieffert, director of strategic marketing for Wireless for ADC. "As carriers look for ways to offer mobile and fixed voice, video and data over the same infrastructure, our Digivance WMX product portfolio provides powerful solutions that can help them implement their convergence strategies efficiently and economically."

ADC is also showcasing its new WFX Wi-Fi Outdoor Enclosure that offers environmental protection for the WFX Wi-Fi Array in all climates and enables the customer to deploy the industry's highest capacity Wi-Fi system outdoors. The outdoor enclosure shields the WFX Wi-Fi Array from rain, heat, cold, direct sun and wind while providing an additional layer of physical security. It also allows the WFX Wi-Fi array to be used in campus and metropolitan Wi-Fi environments, taking advantage of the array's half-mile range.

Each WFX Wi-Fi Array offers up to four wireless backhaul links, with each link providing up to 162 Mbps of wireless backhaul capacity, eliminating the need for a wired Ethernet connection to backhaul Wi-Fi data. The outdoor enclosure is fully compatible with ADC's family of long-range, high-capacity WFX Wi-Fi solutions.

ADC's Subscriber Management Platform, the SG-1, will also be featured at the conference. The SG-1 Service Gateway is the first carrier-class gateway product to offer dynamic "on-the-fly" service creation that allows service providers to add an intelligent layer of value-added services. During the WiMAX demonstration, the SG-1 will provide web authentication, application awareness, accounting, and enable users to dynamically change their service class to accommodate high-bandwidth applications.

About ADC Wireless Solutions

The Digivance product family includes the Digivance Long-Range Coverage Solution (LRCS), the Digivance Indoor Coverage Solution (ICS), the Digivance Street-Level Coverage Solution (SCS), the Digivance NXD digital Distributed Antenna System (DAS) solution and the Digivance CXD digital Distributed Antenna System (DAS) solution. ADC's wireless portfolio also includes a complete line of ClearGain tower-mounted amplifiers for carriers' wireless networks, WFX Wi-Fi solutions and Digivance WMX WiMAX solutions.

About ADC

ADC provides the connections for wireline, wireless, cable, broadcast, and enterprise networks around the world. ADC's innovative network infrastructure equipment and professional services enable high-speed Internet, data, video, and voice services to residential, business and mobile subscribers. ADC (NASDAQ: ADCT) has sales into more than 140 countries. Learn more about ADC at www.adc.com.

Filter Results - This tool allows users to filter through hundreds of different plans and compare voip service providers.

- 1) Sorting by plan type, country, area code and city will let you know which providers are available in your area.
- 2) Sort by actual providers and look at all the plans available for that individual provider.
- 3) Sort by popular features and look at plans that only have the features you want.
- 4) Use the advanced search tool to sort by minimum and maximum price or select from over 60 different features to help select the best voip provider.

Page Results - Sort through the results by average monthly costs, long distance rates, and user ratings.

- 1) Average monthly cost includes the equipment, setup fee, activation fee and monthly fee over 12 months and divides that by 12 to give you the average.
- 2) Long distance rates include the amount of free long distance minutes the plan offers along with the charge per minute after the free minutes are gone.
- 3) Click on the user ratings to see how users rated each provider for sound quality, reliability, customer service, features, price and overall rating. You can also add your own voip review.

Goal - Our goal is to provide our users with the most relevant information available so that they can make an informed decision. If you have any comments or suggestions to improve our product, please share those comments through our feedback page.

Filter Results - This tool allows users to filter through hundreds of different plans and compare voip service providers.

- 1) Sorting by plan type, country, area code and city will let you know which providers are available in your area.
- 2) Sort by actual providers and look at all the plans available for that individual provider.
- 3) Sort by popular features and look at plans that only have the features you want.
- 4) Use the advanced search tool to sort by minimum and maximum price or select from over 60 different features to help select the best voip provider.

Page Results - Sort through the results by average monthly costs, long distance rates, and user ratings

- 1) Average monthly cost includes the equipment, setup fee, activation fee and monthly fee over 12 months and divides that by 12 to give you the average.
- 2) Long distance rates include the amount of free long distance minutes the plan offers along with the charge per minute after the free minutes are gone.
- 3) Click on the user ratings to see how users rated each provider for sound quality, reliability, Customer service, features, price and overall rating. You can also add your own voip review.

Goal - Our goal is to provide our users with the most relevant information available so that they can make an informed decision. If you have any comments or suggestions to improve our product, please share those comments through our feedback page.

*911 over a VoIP service may not function in certain circumstances such as in the event of a loss of power or Internet connection, or if you provide incorrect address information. For more information, please review your Terms of Service with your VoIP provider and visit nena.org
